Passing Thoughts. I'm thinking of my childhood's days So sunny, long and bright, When all the earth to my glad heart

Was radient with delight: When if a tear-drop dimmed my eye 'Twas but a summer shower; One cheering ray—they'd melt away Like rain drops from a flower. How gaily then I danced along,

Each coming hour to greet, While many op'ning buds of hope Were scattered 'neath my feet;

Vet 'twas a soulless happiness,
Of sense but not of mind,
That passed with noiseless tread and left
No deep footprints behind. And on the days of youthful prime

My ling'ring thoughts still dwell, When sunbeams from an inner life Dissolved my childhood's spell; Then in the acontide of my years Those sunbeam's brighter grew. But while they shed a stronger light The shadows length ned too.

I'm thinking of declining days, I'm thinking of declining days,
When setting suns shall throw
Their dark'ning gloom around my path,
To sadden all below;
When those 'round whom my heart strings cling
Shall from that heart be riven,
And hope's bright hues in darkness melt,

Like sunset clouds at even. And oh! I'm thinking of a world Where all from pain are free, Where kindred hearts forever dwell

In spirit harmony;
O! if to fallon erring man
An earth so bright is given
What Azz our heavenly father made
For sinless souls in heaven.

Miscellaneous.

There is not, in all the physical changes of the world, produced by Human Power, so ly kind of a craft, called a Periauger-a schooner with slab-sides. The party are to have their horses and carriage put in by main force, and then to be got over, as they can, in a high wind, tossing about in this petty vessel. The journey takes a month, and the reader may imagine, under such circumstances, how much of time and money are consumed before the family returns so their home in Ohio. Behold the contrast. Forty hours and twenty dollars take you to New York. We hesitate not to say, that the danger of a journey to California is less, and the care of it greater than was a journey from Cincinnati to New York forty years since. Civilization

Opening of the Fair.

Londow, Thursday, May 1, 1851.

Our human life is either comic or tragic according to the point of view from which we regard it. The observer will be impelled to laugh or to weep over it as he shall fix his attention on men's follies or their sufferings.—So of the great fair, and more especially its royal inauguration which I have just returned doubt that the Fair has good points; I think it is agood thing for London first, for England next, and will ultimately benefit mankind.—And yet it would not be difficult so to depict it (and truly,) that its contrivers and managers would never think of deeming the picture.

The day has been very favorable—fair, bland and dry. It is now 4 P. True, even this day would be deemed dull in New York, but there was a deemed dull in New York, but I shall venture no especial criticism as yet — first because the Exhitionis not ready for it; next because I am in the same predicament. A few General observationss must close this letter.
